Dear Sir:

Structure of Matter versus Origin of Matter

There is a fundamental difference between the structure of matter versus the origin of matter ("Scientists re-create basic form of matter," Daily News, Feb 10). The same analogy can be drawn between understanding the structure of a watch and the origin of the watch. The fact that even if we know everything about the structure of an atom it does not imply that we know the origin of the atom. The same is true if we know everything about the structure of a man does not mean we know the origin of the man.

Origin is a philosophic or religious issue. At any time a scientist proclaims origins issues, he has overstepped science into the realm of philosophy or religion. It is unfortunate textbooks and newsprints do not generally make this clear. Thus, it becomes an indoctrinating and brainwash issue.

Sincerely,

Christopher Chui, Ph. D.
